This Department will be glad to give information to Viticulturists and Horticulturists of Fresno county. It is under the supervision of Prof. C. Risan. Correspondence on the subject is invited. Forest Trees for the Plains.

The time will soon be at hand when the planting of forest trees will be a necessity, and already many with more forethought than others are beginning to meet future wants by setting out various trees to furnish a future wood supply. The land thus set apart for forests is, at present at least, not of the very best, and it is to be supposed that even in the future the best land will be reserved for crops of greater value. But there will doubtedly be the case until a regular system in forest planting is inaugurated, but a start which would be important and desirable now, we will most likely have to wait many years for an organized effort in raising forests on our plains. The question now is what trees can we profitably plant in such odd corners and on such grounds as are not needed for anything else? The answer is a most difficult one. Our climate is so very peculiar, that many trees which it would be most desirable to plant would either not grow or grow so slowly that it would be quite useless to plant them. Toward the mid dle of the San Joaquin Valley the pine or Eucalyptus is not hardy enough and many young groves have been known to be killed while yet young, and subsequent cold weather has been known to seriously injure even larger trees. But as we go nearer the foothills, and all along a distance of say eighteen miles the climate is sufficiently mild to insure the permanent growth of the Gum, and large groves of these trees may grow to real value. Set 16 feet apart and supplied with sufficient water for the first few years they will reach in seven or eight years a size that will be profitable to cut. I believe, however, that the best varieties for dry, hot plains have not yet been found, and I suppose as long as our Legislature cannot be induced to appropriate money enough for an experimental garden in this part of the state we will never know which varieties would be the most profitable. The poplar, cottonwood and willow, so generally planted and so generously sown broadcast over our plains by ignorant newcomers, are in many respects very undesirable. The poplars sucker badly and are not to be rooted out if they once get a foothold, and they also impoverish the soil, sending out roots for a long way and injuring any crops planted near. The willow and cottonwood seed too prolifically, and in our irrigated country it will soon cause us more expense and work to keep down the cottonwood and willow seedlings, than it will to otherwise keep the orchards and vineyards cultivated. A variety of the poplar family known as the Balm of Gilead is, in our opinion, one of the very best trees to plant for a wood supply on places that are wet and swampy. This tree grows as fast as the cottonwood, but does not scatter its seed and cotton, which makes the cottonwood such an intolerable nuisance. Moreover, the Balm of Gilead is a healthy tree, is not attacked by borers, and the bees who are aromatic and deep green, do not fall all through summer as do those of the cottonwood. I believe the Balm of Gilead will in the future take the place of the cottonwood, the willow and the Carolina and Lombardy poplar. For a time, but not too dry, places, I consider the China tree (Melia Asedarac) to be profitable. It grows quite rapidly, furnishes good wood and has no objectionable features. Besides, when this tree reaches a certain age the color of the bark, which is rose-red, spreads out through the wood and makes the latter most valuable for cabinet work. This wood at twenty years of age resembles rosewood, and brings accordingly a very high price in the market. So firm is it that it has to a great extent supplanted the imported rosewood. For very dry places, where little or no irrigation can be had, or where the rainfall is sufficient to mature the trees over dry seasons, we know of no better tree than the locust. We consider, however, the common locust of little value; it grows too scraggy with us and is too unsightly, and besides it suckers too much. There are one or two varieties very much superior, and these are the Desmanaous and the Bessoniana, and especially the former is an enormous and upright grower and in our opinion of twice the virtue of the common locust. Many forest trees so highly valued in the East are so far not a success here. Among such trees we may count the Catalpa, the hickory and the walnut. These trees may be successful on the coast, but on the hot, dry plains they are not at home. We have only to add that the tree likely to become most profitable for forest culture is the fig tree. It is well known how many some varieties of the fig grow, and if we also add the profit to be derived from the fruit, which, even if it is allowed to fall on the ground and given no further care, will be excellent feed for hogs, it will at once be seen that it is far superior to any yet proposed. The rapid annual growth of the fig tree will make it valuable when the wood supply is the main object.

HIGH PRICES FOR FRUIT.

Some recent fruit quotations from Denver are only secondly in point of interest to California fruit-growers to those who have been previously apart from the East. Last week, for instance, apples were quoted at 3 and 4 cents per pound; Nevilla pears, two pounds for 25 cents; quinces, 7 cents per pound; Mission grapes, 10 cents per pound; Flame Tokays, two pounds for 25 cents; and Isle of Pern and Muscat grapes on similar prices. In New York California peaches of late varieties are sold at $8 and $10 per bushel (say, 13 to 15 cents per pound). Our fruit-growers, who have been offered $8 or less per ton for Mission grapes, and a good deal less for apples, will be apt to consider such a high price for most varieties of grapes may well be excused if they find fault at such a disparity between the price received by them and those paid by the consumer. They may take heart of courage, however, and consider that if people at the East are content to pay such exorbitant prices, the time may, perhaps, some time come when the railroad company and the commission men will not be able to pocket quite all the profit in the fruit business, and a majority of it may find its way into the hands of the struggling producer.—[San Francisco Chronicle.

Fruit has been kept in perfect condition by simply covering the jars with cotton batting. Putrifaction is caused by the inviable creatures in the air. Cooking the fruit expels these, and as they cannot pass through cotton batting, the fruit thus protected will keep an indefinite period. Tyndall has proved that atmospheric germs cannot pass through

OLULA'S PYRAMID.

ALL THAT IS LEFT TO TELL OF FORMER MAGNIFICENCE.

The Present Cholula a Rare Gem of Beauty—View from the Pyramid —A Shrine on the Mountain Top.

[Fannie B. Ward's Letter.]

In one of his letters to the Spanish sovereign Cortez wrote: "This city of Churultecan (the ancient name of Cholula) is situated on a plain and contains 20,000 houses within the body of the town and as many more in the suburbs. Its people are well dressed and the neighboring fields exceedingly fertile. I certify to your majesty that from one of the temples I have counted more than 400 towers and they are all the towers of temples."

To-day no trace remains of the 40,000 houses and 400 towers—nothing but the huge pyramid to hint of former magnificence. History has made familiar Cortez' tragic advent into the Home of Anahuac, his through the mountain of Doma, Malinia, he discovered a plot among the Indians for the extermination of the hated invaders, and determined to make an example of them which should strike terror to the hearts of the whole race of Montezuma tremble upon his throne beyond the mountain. Treacherously assembling all the chiefs and leading men of the city in the great square of the town, without a moment's warning Cortez turned his army upon them and slaughtered the defenseless people by thousands. We are told that the square was filled to suffocation, were crowded with the corpses of unoffending citizens, their houses and temples all burned to the ground, and the image of their Aztyan ran red with blood. After this wholesale work the gonfalon on the top of the pyramid was solemnly purified by Cortez order and the standard of the cross supplied above the ruins of Cholula.

The present Cholula is a rare gem in the way of picturesqueness. Wattle-mented churches surround its grass-grown plaza. Cannon balls, bedded in all the walls, tell of war's alarms, and among the numerous nun-forsaken convents is one now used as a prison, where the convicts are forced to weaving sashes on primitive hand looms. Indeed, the industry for which Cholula is justly prominent appears to be sash-weaving or relic-hunting. Each little pulqueria and fondita, with its open doors and interiors as dispensed, has its collection of Toltec idols and ancient pottery for sale among the beverages. Ragged boys and barefooted maidens follow the stranger about the streets importuning him to buy the wares of their ancestors. Five-hundred-year-old divinities of undoubted authenticity may be bought for a few cents, and for $1 or $2 one may purchase household gods by the peck, and the sacred vessels once used in their worship. Frequently small vases or glazed and colored pottery are unearthed in excavating, or are found intact in the fields and can always be secured from their unappreciative owners for a trifling sum.

A well-paved road, with steps cut in at intervals, winds among rose bushes and cactus up to the top of the huge pyramid. On its lofty summit, among tombs of Aztec and yellow clay, is the ruin of a convent of sacred stone, set close at the edge of the terrace and bearing date 1666. From this point one of the most beautiful view in the world is obtained, and here Humboldt made many of his astronomical observations. No less than seventy villages may be counted within the near-by circle of hills the fertile fields between look like a gigantic checker-board, dotted with pale spiders' webs, in all directions, and flowing down the mountain sides and gullies over all. The church that now occupies the site of Quetzalcoatl's temple is delightful in its quaint mythical divinity, called the Virgen de los Remedios. Whether she was brought to Mexico by the Spanish conquerors, or was conceived soon after their arrival here, is a mooted question.

She is a small, ugly wooden doll, a bout three feet high, evidently carved with a jack-knife, with a hole gouged out for eyes and mouth—and yet was supposed to possess divine power to heal all wounds and diseases. The image was lost on the memorable noche triste, when the Spaniards were forced to flee from the city of the capital, and nothing more was heard from her for half a century, till one day a wandering Indian found her perched in the heart of a huge maguey on top of a barren mountain. The restoration of the image was joyfully hailed by the Spaniards, who proceeded to build a church upon the spot where she was found, and in which she was installed with great ceremony, her shrine being a century plant of huge size, with its flowering stalk somewhat the worse for wear and tear, may still be seen by anybody who cares to make the climb back, pilgrim-like, to the lonely mountain. Your correspondent has made it, and declares that it is by no means worth the trouble.

As long as Spain prospered in Mexico, untold sums were lavished upon this Virgen de los Remedios. But bye-and-bye she found a powerful rival in the Virgin of Guadalupe. When Morelos's Washington—the brave Miguel Hidalgo—raised for his revolutionary standard a picture of Guadalupe, his rebellion assumed the character of a crusade. After his defeat and execution the Virgen de los Remedios assisted in celebrating the victory, borne about the streets of the City of Mexico with the full military costume of a Spanish general, every where hailed as the patroness of Spain and conqueror of her self, the Creole Virgin. The tables soon turned, however, for when the revolutionary army finally overthrew the military rule was torn from her sacred person by a bold soldier of the empire, she was installed and then rolled about in the dust, and afterward the commanding officers made out her passports for a trip to Europe, and ordered her to leave the country. She was restored at length to her shrine on the mountain top, but never to the old honors and emoluments—which to day are all bestowed upon her rival, Guadalupe, the patroness of the Indians.

There being no public-house in Cholula, travelers must depend upon private hospitality, or bring with them a luncheon from Puebla. One may leave the latter early in the morning and return at evening a day's time being sufficient to "do" the sacred city. A more delightful excursion cannot be made in the wide world over, and what grander closing piece can be imagined than sunset on the gold cypresses of that mysterious pyramid, with the matchless panorama spread out below? After such a plunge into the misty past, one returns reluctantly to the commonplace, and casts many backward glances on the homeward journey toward that prowling-place of mythological spooks, the home of Anahuac, whose white towers glisten in the sunset as if it were still the city of prediction.

Inhabited Houses in Great Britain.
[Exchange.]

The increase in the number of inhabited houses in Great Britain in the ten years 1871 to 1881 was, in round figures, from 4,500,000 to 5,000,000. The increase in all single-house proportion—namely: from 35,500,000 pounds sterling in 1898 to 123,000,000 pounds sterling in 1882.

[Boston Budget.]

Eating is not particularly esthetic, but it is a tri-daily acknowledgment to ourselves and others of our mortal feebleness. Were not the practice of eating general, it would be held a disgraceful yielding, and we should feel shyly, with a shame at being seen, like that of munching a lunch sealed on a curlstone. "What a piece of work is man, how noble in reason! how infinite in faculties! in form and moving, how express and admirable! in action, how like an angel! in apprehension, how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals!" Yet thrice a day this paragon and godlike animal indulges in "apprehension" of quite another sort, for it is feeding time, and there is a snarling and snapping and a fleshy wagging of jaws all the meantime which is within us is resupplied with fuel. People confess this weakness to each other and rush in herds to satisfy it, as though singly it were an abasement.

It is because eating is ungraceful that it is so little considered in your age. A lady looks like an angel at the dinner table; is that the reason she loves the kitchen so little? Is it for such a reason, or by an instinct of vice in national character, that the representative American is a sallow, lank, loose jointed man, who began life with a good constitution, which he treated as if he had a grudge against it, who every day steps over mountains in his path, and at 30 looks out for the first time, that he has an "internal" wrong, thereupon goes into the doctor's hands and afterwards eating food from one hand and pills from the other?

In the New World type nature ventured upon an experiment, and put in one more drop of nervous fluid, but the American treats the drop as if it were stamina and not impulse, holder and not pressure. So we are old at 30. We have not time for digest, and throw meat to our stomachs with the same hasty jerk as to dogs, making them snap it in the same hasty way. We all carry our weight in our own bodies, and live and work in spite of them. Of course, a man who depends on a janitor for his clean towels is frequently left without the soap runs out, or something is wrong, but business must not be so, so good terms with the janitor, you know, and so they give him so much a week for his trouble and silence.

"Yes this is a new business in Chicago, but in the east they've had it for two or three months, though down there they furnish nothing but towels, while we put in everything a man wants. Take his toilet with. In New York I understand they make a specialty of giving a man the same time while, so that he does not have to use towels that anybody else has used before him. I'm told that not one Chicago man in a hundred is so particular as to care for such a thing."

The Cantaloupe Crank.
[Philadelphia News.]

As a summer breakfast dish the cantaloupe is undeniably a treat, for it is both meat and drink, and a man who eats a cantaloupe for breakfast needs little else than good bread and butter and a little relish of some kind to complete it. His place is all right, but not so in the places where the cantaloupe is regarded as a fruit. This species of the genus crank is the person who tells you there is nothing like cantaloupe. He eats it three times a day and he has as many different ways of eating it as we are told there are of eating oranges. He eats it plain with a spoon in the morning; with a fork at noon, when he spreads a nauseating compound of pepper and salt all over it, thus disguising its delicate taste, and with ice cream at night, which he declares is even worse than the pepper and salt. Such a crank tells you that the sugar in cantaloupe is what makes it fatten, to make the blood clear, and so on through a long catalogue of benefits to be derived from its use in any serious illness. He has the first day that he reported to Grant he was laid under a ban of the hottest and most severe kind. The screaming of the bails, the roaring of the cannon, and the rattle and rumble and rattle of musketry thoroughly demoralized him. He became absolutely sick and paralyzed with fear. He was on hand for the first excitement that he lost physical control over himself. Grant came up at the very height of his fright and noticing his pale face, his blue lips, and chattering teeth, he said: "Captain, you are frightened." That is natural enough. You will get over it. Suppose," continued Grant, "I should come to you with a hat containing ripe, nine white beans and one black one, and I should ask you to thrust your hand into the hat at a venture and pick out the black bean; do you think your chance of getting that black bean would not be equal? Well, your chance for being hit under this fire is no greater than your chance for drawing the black bean." The officer at once took heart, and from then on he never showed the slightest sign of fear.

Bessemer's Beginning.
[Chicago Herald.]

Sir Henry Bessemer, the steel-process inventor, first made his mark by devising a stamp that could not be used twice. The English government made him superintendent of stamps at a good salary, and he called in all the stamps to reform her that they could get married soon. His invention consisted of a little punched 400 holes in the paper to be stamped, and the young lady suggested that it would be much simpler to make a stamp that contained movable dates. He set to work and devised one which the government adopted, and which earned him the position that had just been created for him. He had himself rendered it unnecessary.

Water in the Desert.
[Boston Post.]

French engineers have succeeded in finding water in the desert country of Sahara. At the depth of more than 300 feet they struck a current which rushed forth from the surface with such velocity as to carry huge stones high into the air.

Civilized Indians.

The fashionable game of the mighty Hurons in the Canadian forests this summer is croquet. The young braves send the balls through the hoops with as much vigor as their ancestors used in wielding the tomahawk.

He Declined the Offer.
[Exchange.]

Gentleman (to little boy)—What are you going to do with the puppy, little boy?

Little Boy—I'm goin' to drown him.

Gentleman—I'll give you a dollar for him.

Little Boy (after due consideration)—No sir; I guess I won't sell him. I have to give most of the money to father, and I wouldn't have the fun of drowning the dog. Yep, I guess I won't sell him.

The Sacking of San Francisco.

Officers of the Chilkan navy talk a great deal about the anticipated time when they may sack San Francisco, and their idea is said seriously to be that a project of that kind is quite feasible.

The visit of the Modesto Guard to Fresno has been postponed until next Friday evening.

The work of enlarging the mill ditch is now being rapidly forward, but a large amount of work is to be done, considerable time will be required to complete it.

A considerable portion of the space on our local page this week is occupied by an ordinance defining misdemeanors in the city of Fresno. Everyone should read the ordinance and preserve a copy for future reference.

The Forsyth Guard will give a grand ball at the Opera House on Friday evening next, on the occasion of the visit of the Modesto Guard. The Fresno Silver Band will play in public for the first time on that evening.

The second annual ball of Fresno Parlor N. S. G. W., to be given at the Opera House on Thanksgiving evening, is looked forward to with much interest by the society people of this city. The character of the parties heretofore given by Fresno Parlor is a guarantee that the one just announced will be conducted in a manner satisfactory to all who attend.

There was not as large an attendance at the meeting of the Horticultural Club of this city last Saturday afternoon as there should have been, or as was anticipated. The only important action taken was the instruction of the Local Inspector to notify those having infected trees to spray them before January 15th, and the appointment of a committee to assist in carrying the order into effect.

There will be a grand opening ball in I. Brownstone & Co.'s new brick building at Selma, on Wednesday evening, November 11th. Prof. Smith's string band will furnish the music for the occasion. Newhouse was badly injured at the stable in the rear of Hinsein & Co.'s store last Saturday by coming in violent collision with the delivery wagon, to which another horse was attached. One of the shafts of the wagon entered the horse's thigh and ranged diagonally upward a distance of more than a foot and broke off. The piece was pulled out with a pair of blacksmith tongs, and it is thought the animal will recover.

The Parkhurst Addition is the latest accession to the suburban residence property of this city. There are about twenty-five blocks in the addition, which is located on the high ground south of town, and is the only residence property near the business portion of town which is now offered at low prices. The World's Champion.

Mr. Edward Hanlan, the great oarsman, and until his recent defeat by Beach in Australia, the champion of the world, may certainly be looked upon as an authority in everything affecting athletic sports. Before leaving Australia for this country, he wrote a letter in which he stated that he had used St. Jacobs Oil with the most beneficial results. He found it a reliable remedy for muscular pains in the arms and limbs, and from his personal experience took great pleasure in recommending it. No stronger proof of the worth of what is claimed for St. Jacobs Oil could be furnished than this, and it will undoubtedly carry great weight with all thoghtful and intelligent people.

The horsemen and farmers are getting excited over the National Horse Liniment. This remedy is the only one that will cure that dreaded disease, Lockjaw. Two very bad cases near Stockton, Cal., were cured after using three bottles of horse. It will never be without the National Liniment in my stable.
